THE HISTORY OF MEDICINE

THE HISTORY OF MEDICINE,
FROM ITS ORIGIN TO THE NINETEENTH CEMTURY. By P. V. Rescuard. Translated from the French by Cornelius G. Comegys. M. D.
"Dr. Comegys commends this work as one of great cradition, profound analytical utility and general accuracy. Its also is excellent—to present at a stance a own piece survey of the progcess as do in medical and sorgical schence, and of its present excludition. The author has brought to his task, we may say, without stampting to decide upon his accuracy, much of true philosophic habit in his broad generalizations, budit order and extitical snelysis; and the testimony of his translator prediapness us to rely upon the scientific accuracy, as we do upon the logical ability of the work. We must also express our admixt ion of the style in which it appears."
"The Medical Profession in the United States is under oblgations to Dr. Comegys for his recent translati in of Dr. Rencuard's celebrated History of Medicine, a work of great research as d most uncommon sensition. As is truly remarked by the author? In order to study and practice medicine in a proper in atmer it is necessary to be impressed with its importance, and to be so impressed, we must believe in it." The scarce of this helief lies in its history, and there alone; and the practitionwho does not seek with avidity a know edge of that history may rationally auspect himself to be wan ing in some of the qualities increasery to render him useful and embent in his profession.
To the streent of medicine therefore, we recommend this sook as one which, while it stores his memory with valuable information, will testify of his all'innee with the great men in whose focuste pe it his duty to fread and remind him that it is eclence and learning and not the deploma that constitutes the difference between the enlighteened physician and the mechanics quock-atton, will testify of his allance with the freat mee in whose focists pet it his duty to fread and remind him that it is science and learning and not the diploma that constitutes the difference between the calightened physician and the mechanics quak-salver."

"But it is not simply a professional book. The relations of medicines to the various arts and aciences as they arose and progressed is faithfully tanced, and the intimate connection existing between all those intellectual discoveries and researches that are for the improvement of mankine is ably demonstrated. Geography and anatony, such r. Columbus and Mandine, began to progress simultaneous y; while the Galent system of physiology was established just as the errors of the Ptolemaic system of aircroomy were expicited, and Barvey's discovery of the orrelation of the blood is coers' with the demonstration of the meant of the blood is coers' with the demonstration of the meant of the blood is coers' with the demonstration of the meant of the blood is coers' with the demonstration of the form of the blood is coers' with the demonstration of the most of the blood is coers' with the demonstration of the form of the blood is coers' with the demonstration of the most of the blood is coers' with the demonstration of the meant of the blood is coers' and periods of the history of medicine is divided into the easys—of foundation, of transition, of renovation. "
It has all the freedom, alexance and force of an original work."

Dr. Jeckson of the University of Penn'a, Dr. Durgitson of Jefferson Medical College and Dr. 1, Gurney Smith of Paon's Medical College, have grouply commanded this work to their classes.

C. BLANGHARD, No. 32 Nassan. ct.

This is an American Novel, founded upon fast, and written with great power and beauty. The scene is laid in the Far West, among the primitive people of the country, of which and of whom the work is highly cearriptive, while the story itself is of a most thrilling nature, and may be well compared with Cooper's and Dr. Baird's Leather-Stocaung Tales. Some of the descriptive passages, of pastural writing, are equal to anything in the language.

In the language.

The following are among the many notices of the press:

From The Times

"An Indian tale of great interest and merit. The style is simply, the language unaffected—often beautiful—and the tone originite; it is a production of good taste, and no one will rise from its perusal unsatisfied."

dignifice; it is a production of good taste, and no one will rise from its perusal unsatisfied.

Exceedingly well written, and full of rowance and poetry.

A work superior to one half the popular nove s of the day, and one that may be read with pleasure and advantage. It is moral and instructive, and the author has evidently a good knowledge of Indian characteristics.

It is a work of merit, and the author evidently anderstands dramtic effect.

From The Evening Post.

The author of this work is a young man of great premise, and we doubt not that the talent indicated in this story will place him among the first writers of the age.

"A work of no ordinary power, and written not only with taste, but with much beauty of diction. The story is one of great interest."

This is a very meritorious and eleverly told story; its style is exceedingly chaste and beautiful, and the language fine. It is clearly the production of a man of high education, talent and experience; and we heartily commend it to all who can appreciate the English language in heautiful form, a tale of great dramatic effect, and a meral true to nature."

This is a compasion volume to Gray's Elegy and the Deserted Village, which attained such a reat success as specimens of Lilagenthia. Wood. As a presentation volume for the obstitution. Compared to the control of the property of the control of the contr scholar or the orator who can explain our Lord's Parables with the power shown in the potersiture here given of the "Ten Virgua" and the "Sleeping Husbandman". What preacher out teach the hum lity or majesty of outy more eloquently than the ill natralions acre presented of Christ rebuting pride by setting a child before his Disciples, and subduing worldlines by calling a third before his Disciples, and subduing worldlines by calling Matthew form his pold to follow the Master unto the end? What exigencies, however learned or eloquent, can equal the tonen of this gentus in bringing to the heart the meaning of the Reserrection of Lazarus, and the pathes of Gethsemene and Calvary "
